Dear Editor,

RE: A park of recycled land

I write to correct a factual error contained in your article above, dated July 11th 2010.

I made no statement about the assignment of actual liability as was reported but rather suggested an illustrative example as quoted from the press conference transcript below;

"Until the contamination is analysed as part of the remediation process, the actual people responsible can't be determined. So let's suggest that as part of that process 50% of the materials is found to be gasworks contaminations, then that will clearly be a gasworks company's final liability and if they aren't prepared to pay that via normal negotiations then we will take, we will follow legal proceedings to ensure that happens".

I would appreciate a correction to this effect being made.

Yours sincerely,
